The Nelson Jazz Club Big Band is the latest incarnation of a group of jazz enthusiasts who wanted to pursue their musical interests in a large ensemble setting; a traditional stage band playing syncopated written arrangements usually containing improvised interludes. Most people will be familiar with this style through listening to the works of Duke Ellington, Count Basie, Glen Miller and other famous bandleaders.

The band during its history has performed on national television, at many local dances and concerts and at nearly every Nelson Jazz Festival since its inception. The mixture of youthful enthusiasm and polished experience amongst its members ensure that it continues to receive plaudits from its audiences.
